PART II

NARRATIVE SUMMARY

During the month of June 1972 NVA activity continued on several fronts; however, of particular note is the fact that allied forces have mounted offensives to retake those areas of South Vietnam now occupied by NVA and VC units. Responding to the allied initiatives, naval gunfire usage increased markedly over the previous month. The number of ship days provided by CTG 70.8 (Commander, Cruiser Destroyer Group, Seventh Fleet) rose to 533 with the number of rounds fired per ship day rising significantly from 144 in May to 183 in June with 97,535 rounds of all types and calibers being fired in support of the Army of the Republic of Vietnam, the Vietnamese Marine Corps, and Vietnamese provincial forces. Naval gunfire ships continued to receive heavy counter-battery fire in northern MR I underscoring the NVA's concern over the destructive fires being delivered by the U.S. Navy's destroyers and cruisers.

During the second week of June the ARVN 2nd Division mounted an offensive into the Que Son Mountains which encountered light resistance. The enemy appears to have pulled back into the mountains away from the coast and out of naval gunfire range. With the exception of this action, the activity in the southern portion of MR I remained static and comparatively quiet.

Activity in northern MR I centered on the Vietnamese Marine Corps and Vietnamese Airborne Divisions which maintained near continuous contact with the enemy throughout the month by means of thrusts into enemy occupied territory and by their prominent positions along friendly front lines. From 4-6 Jun 72, units of the Vietnamese Airborne Division made probing thrusts through and behind enemy lines under the protective umbrella of naval gunfire units stationed just off the coast. On 8 and 9 Jun 72, Vietnamese Marine Corps units conducted operation Song Thanh 8-72 making helicopter assaults behind enemy lines in southern Quang Tri Province. Again from 18-20 Jun 72, Vietnamese Marines penetrated enemy territory by way of helicopter and water borne assaults. In each of these three operations naval gunfire units fired missions ranged from landing zone/beach preps, direct support missions, and harassment and interdiction missions. Enemy resistance varied hour to hour, day to day, from very light to extremely heavy including fanatical counter-assaults with keyed-up troops supported by tanks and other tracked vehicles. The value of the naval gunfire supporting arm was consistently lauded by Vietnamese commanders and American advisors in the field. These probes set the stage for operation Lan Son 72, the Vietnamese counter offensive to retake enemy held portions of Military Region I. This operation began on 28 June with naval gunfire units firing in excess of 4000 rounds of ammunition. Friendly troops reported encountering only light resistance when advancing through areas previously fired upon by naval gunfire units. Airborne and ground spotters called in numerous missions on enemy tank formations, troops, gun emplacements, and logistics storage points. On the 29th and 30th of Jun 72 friendly forces continued their advanced encountering only sporadic pockets of moderate enemy resistance, with naval gunfire units providing in excess of 8000 rounds.

For Military Region II the month of June brought forth flurries of enemy activities and thus greater utilization of naval gunfire assets. On 1 June LZ Crystal found itself besieged by NVA forces and receiving rocket, mortar, and artillery fire. The ARVN commander requested two U.S. Navy destroyers with 5"/54 caliber guns be made available for continuous long range coverage. From 4-14 June the gunline commander provided two such destroyers which fired in support of friendly troops. On 16 June the ARVN conducted an amphibious assault in the vicinity of the Phu Cat Mountains, a VC stronghold since the time of the Japanese occupation. The Vietnamese swept ashore following a beach prep by the USS EDWARDS (DD-950). The friendly troops encountered little resistance, and the operation ended with no appreciable gains. During the third week of June naval gunfire operations shifted to the vicinities of Hoai An, Hoai Nhon, and Tam Quan in northern Binh Dinh Province, in an effort to disrupt lines of enemy communications, locate and destroy enemy strongpoints and to generally reconnoiter the area in preparation for a possible assault by friendly troops into this area.

Naval gunfire missions in Military Region III throughout this month of June were entirely within Phouc Tuy Province and centered on the enemy held towns of Xuyen Moc and Dat Do. In the latter part of the month, air and ground assets were shifted to other more crucial parts of the country and naval gunfire continued to fire unobserved missions at enemy staging and supply areas.

Enemy activity in Military Region IV continued in Choung Thien Province and the north eastern extremities of An Xuyen, both out of range of naval gunfire. Air observers directed fire missions along the western coast of the delta against enemy supply routes and staging areas, achieving numerous KIA's, secondary explosions and other GDA.

The month of June has seen naval gunfire become a more viable and certainly more responsive supporting arm due to its coordinated usage in conjunction with the initiatives by the Vietnamese Marine Corps and Vietnamese Airborne Divisions. Progress throughout Vietnam has not been achieved without increased personnel injuries and deaths. This unit awarded seven purple hearts in the month of June to personnel injured in combat; there were no deaths. As allied forces push on towards Quang Tri City and as allied efforts to re-take enemy held portions of MR II materialize, the role of naval gunfire will no doubt increase as the enemy is more firmly entrenched in these areas.
